

SPEAK ENGLISH NOW!

The Podcast That Will Help You Speak English Fluently.

With No Grammar and No Textbooks!

Episode #094

American vs. British

Vocabulary Differences (part 2)

Get more lessons at: SpeakEnglishPodcast.com

Hi! I am very happy today because I have a huge announcement! A new course is now available to help you with your pronunciation. And it's for all levels!
Visit: PronunciationCourse.com and get it now for a special price.
I repeat: PronunciationCourse.com

We all know that American and British English sound different most of the time. But did you know there is also a difference in vocabulary? That's right. There are spelling, vocabulary, and even specific grammar differences between the two.

Last week we started with a series of vocabulary differences between American and British English. Today we will continue this series; if you didn't listen to last week's episode, you might want to do so right now.

And with a point of view story, you're gonna compare the different grammar points. It's the perfect way to learn grammar and new vocabulary without memorizing.

Ok! Let's start!

I'm going to tell you a word in American English, and I'll ask you to guess what would be the equivalent word in British English.

1) Truck

In American English, we use the word truck when we refer to a large, heavy road vehicle used for carrying goods, materials, or troops.

Can you guess the equivalent in British?

Yes! In the United Kingdom, people use the word lorry.

American-truck
British- lorry

2) After washing the dishes, we use a dish towel to dry the dishes.

Can you guess which word is used in British English?

That's right. People call it "tea towel" or "tea cloth" in the UK.

American-dish towel

Get more lessons at: SpeakEnglishPodcast.com

British- tea towel or tea cloth

3) In the States, people live in an apartment.

Do you know the word in British English?

Yes. That's right. In British, they use the word flat.

American-apartment

British- flat

4) I live on the first floor and my neighbor on the second floor.

Simple. Right?

Not really. Let me explain why.

The equivalent in British for the "first floor" would be the "ground floor."

The second floor in British is called the first floor.

Confusing!! Right?

So let me repeat the example in American.

American:

" I live on the first floor, and my neighbor on the second floor."

British:

" I live on the ground floor, and my neighbor on the first floor."

5) In American, we use the word zee to refer to the last letter of the alphabet.

What's the word in British English?

That's right. In British, they use the word zed.

American-zee

British- zed

6) At the end of each sentence, we usually use the word period.

Get more lessons at: SpeakEnglishPodcast.com

"Period" is also used to indicate that a decision is irrevocable.

For example: "I forbid you to go to that concert, period."

What's the word used in British English?

Exactly. In British English, they use the word full-stop.

American-period

British- full-stop

7) Did you know that your geographic area is identified by zip code?

Do you know how to say this in British English?

That's right. In the United Kingdom, they call it postal code.

American-zip code

British- postal code

8) "What's your timetable for tomorrow? When will you get some time to listen to the podcast?"

We use the word timetable to ask about someone's plans or their availability.

Although in British English they use the word....

Schedule. In the UK, it's more common to use the word schedule instead of timetable.

American-timetable

British- schedule

9) "I have made an error. Can I borrow your eraser?"

In American English, we use the word eraser when we want to erase something that we have written.

In British, they use a different word.

Can you guess?

Get more lessons at: SpeakEnglishPodcast.com

Yep. In British English, they call it rubber.

American-eraser

British- rubber

10) "I'm tired. I can't climb the stairs!! Let's take the elevator!"

What's the equivalent of the word elevator in British English?

That's right. In British English, it's called a lift.

American-elevator

British- lift

Point of View

(practice your grammar)

This kind of story will help you to improve your English grammar. It's very simple. I tell you the same story more than once. Every time I change a grammatical aspect. So, you can see how grammar changes, and you can compare. You just have to listen.

You'll listen to the story in the first person in the past tense:

I'm Tom, and I'm an American. Last year I visited my best friend in London. When I arrived at my destination, it was raining cats and dogs, so I immediately sought refuge. I entered a store, hoping to buy a raincoat or even new clothes. I was completely soaked, so I wasn't surprised to see everyone staring at me. Since I felt uncomfortable, I tried to get some sympathy, so I told the salesman that my pants were very wet.

Surprisingly, I didn't get the answer I expected. Instead of showing compassion, the shop assistant started laughing out loud. I was very disappointed and felt humiliated. I expected Londoners to be much more polite. Later, however, when I told my friend what had happened, I felt even more ashamed. It turns out that in British English, the word "pants" means underwear. I should have used the word trousers instead of pants.

Let's listen to the same story in the third person in the past tense:

Last year, an American named Tom visited his best friend in London. When he arrived at his destination, it was raining cats and dogs, so he immediately sought refuge. He entered a store hoping to buy a raincoat or even new clothes. Tom was completely soaked, so he wasn't surprised to see everyone staring at him. Since he felt uncomfortable, he tried to get some sympathy, so he told the salesman that his pants were very wet. Surprisingly, Tom didn't get the answer he expected. Instead of showing compassion, the shop assistant started laughing out loud. Tom was very disappointed and felt humiliated. He expected Londoners to be much more polite. Later, however, when he told his friend what had happened, he felt even more ashamed. It turns out that in British English, the word "pants" means underwear.

Poor Tom! He should have used the word trousers instead of pants.

Great! I like these kinds of stories because they're easy to remember and help a lot with learning English. Humor also makes learning more enjoyable.

I have a huge announcement! A new course is now available to help you with your pronunciation. And it's for all levels! Visit: PronunciationCourse.com and get it now for a special price. I repeat: PronunciationCourse.com

Well, that's it for today!

Please help me spread the word about the podcast. Tell your friends about the show and leave a comment on iTunes when you have a minute. That would make me very happy!

I'll be back next week!

Take care! Bye! Bye!

Georgiana

founder of SpeakEnglishPodcast.com

Get more lessons at: SpeakEnglishPodcast.com